 LEXINGTON

The Well of Lexington is a two-year residential program that aids sex trafficking victims. The goal of the program is to provide a safe home free from fear - a home where the victims can receive emotional support, counseling and necessary physical and psychological help. They spend the two years living a clean, drug free life where they find employment, advance their education and learn life skills that were neglected during their formative years. Learning to trust and learning to take control of their lives is a lesson that is difficult to learn. Each girl comes with her unique story. The needs of each girl are addressed and tended to.

Eileen Levy, Executive Director of The Well of Lexington, Inc, has spent the last 10 years within the nonprofit world. She has a background in communications and marketing, which she uses with community outreach groups, such as Colors of Promise and Lazos que Unen. She earned her B.A. in Communications Studies from Eastern Kentucky University and is a certified patient navigator. Her passion for helping others has led her to become a member of Altrusa of Lexington which in turn helps her to empower survivors of all kinds.

Seth Frazier, a detective with the Lexington Police Department, will share what human trafficking looks like in Kentucky.

Summer Dickerson is a survivor of human trafficking and domestic violence. She is the founder and Executive Director of Women of the Well Ministry in Louisville, Kentucky. Summer travels around Kentucky and to other states talking to professionals and other survivors about her journey to free herself from "the life" and from addiction. In addition, Summer is also a member of the Attorney General's Survivor Council in Frankfort and is on the National Survivor Leader Board. Summer will soon be traveling to New York City to present her story about overcoming human trafficking to the United Nations.
